DESCRIPTION

Solid elm table with rectangular top and stretcher base, created for the Les Arcs resort.

Less commonly seen in this wood, the elm highlights a dense and contrasted grain, reinforcing the visual presence of the top. The construction is straightforward and unadorned, reflecting an approach where material and function take precedence over formal effects.

Designed as part of the furnishing programs for the resort, the table aligns with an architecture intended for collective, durable use in a mountain environment.

France, circa 1970.
